

Teaching & Assessing Intercultural Competence in English

Using Both Face-to-Face Techniques and Blended Learning

ONLINE TRAIN-THE-TRAINER COURSE

Intercultural challenges arise wherever people from different cultural backgrounds meet, be it in professional or private contexts. Different communication styles, differences in values, basic attitudes and conflict styles shape interaction especially in times of globalisation. English as the international language of science, business and tourism does not eliminate such differences. On the contrary: the unspoken assumption that everyone speaks "the same English" often leads to misunderstandings, personal alienation and conflicts.

Whether someone is interculturally competent is proven in face-to-face interaction, both in speaking or in writing. Language and its practical use in direct interaction is therefore always the focus in teaching and testing.
