INTERCULTURAL COMPETENCE
IN ENGLISH

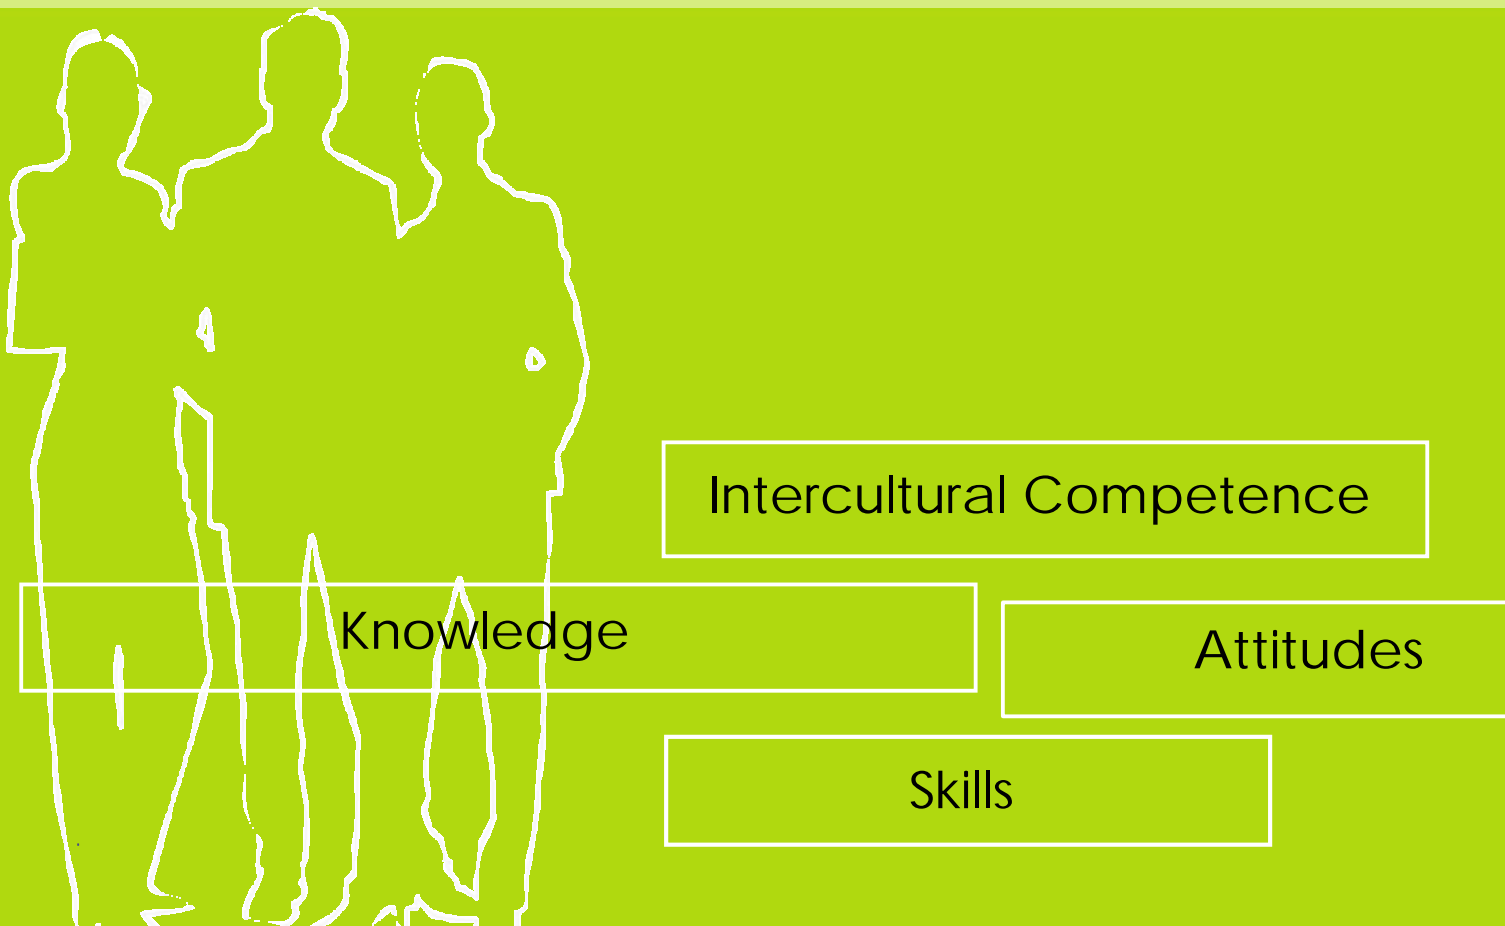

INTERCULTURAL COMPETENCE IS COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE

There is no doubt that language and culture are inextricably connected, but how many language teachers really feel qualified to teach intercultural communicative competence and use knowledge of intercultural theory in language classes? Does knowing about the findings of Hofstede and Trompenaars, being able to define low-context cultures, collectivist societies etc. make language classes more meaningful?

Intercultural communicative competence is a combination of knowledge, attitudes and skills. Communication skills are the focus, i.e. using language in intercultural encounters to ensure the best results for all involved.

For corporate clients this means doing business well, building successful relationships and negotiating optimal outcomes to ensure ongoing and future business.

Most business today is conducted in English, which means that English language trainers may have a head start over intercultural trainers. The ICE Train-the-Trainer course uses language trainers' skills and experience, combining these with the relevant intercultural components to show how language training can best meet the demands of intercultural communication.

INTERNATIONAL ENGLISH - WHAT IS IT?

English is no longer the sole domain of the native speaker, whether British, American, Indian or whatever. Many learners deal with speakers of languages other than English, whose English is influenced by their own languages. This makes it no less suitable for intercultural encounters.

Which English is used in international encounters? How important is grammatical correctness? Which mistakes count?

A common understanding of the language used needs to be established before real negotiation starts as it is the use of language which will determine the success or failure of the relationship.

The ICE Train-the-Trainer course explores these issues and qualifies trainers to find the answers as well as providing material to deal with the role of English in international business.

INTERCULTURAL COMMUNICATIVE COMPETENCE: IF IT CAN BE DEFINED IT CAN BE TESTED.

The Certificate in Intercultural Competence in English - ICE

The Certificate in Intercultural Competence – ICE has been developed by a team of elc testing experts in cooperation with the Chamber of Industry and Commerce in Saarland, using the Council of Europe's Manual - Relating Language Examinations to the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages. (http://www.coe.int/t/dg4/linguistic/Manual1_EN.asp#TopOfPage)

The focus lies on interculturally appropriate communication skills in English.

Extensive pre-testing was part of the development. The test is administered by elc in cooperation with several educational institutions.

The ICE Train-the-Trainer course qualifies trainers to act as examiners in the Oral Examination for the Certificate in Intercultural Competence in English.

References

Knowing about and understanding the importance of cultural differences is of great advantage in dealing successfully with business partners worldwide. ... We hope that this can be implemented in the training of students at universities and vocational schools.

Norbert Müller, CEO, TRANSTEC GmbH, Homburg

We very much appreciate the work done by the elc team of trainers and teacher trainers. elc demonstrates in practice the importance of communication in modern language teaching and also knows how to motivate teachers and increase their enthusiasm for their work.

Joachim Mohr, Ministerium für Bildung, Familie, Frauen und Kultur des Saarlands

I have known the elc team for many years and in many contexts. I have always been extremely impressed with the high level of competence they display in the teaching of foreign languages. elc's work in the field of language assessment is efficient and target-based and has made a significant contribution towards bringing language research and practice closer together.

Prof. Dr. Reinhold Freudenstein – Philipps-University, Marburg, Founder-member of ERF AWirtschaft

Being able to function properly in Europe today does not mean "only" the mastery of linguistic systems. It is the ability to apply language and other means of communication appropriately in various situations. It is with great pleasure that I see that elc is putting this into practice.
